The Hamiltonian crowd that wrote the Constitution, he said, removed the Supreme Court about five degrees from the people. Before the judges of the Supreme Court can be appointed, there must first be elected a President. Before the President is elected, the State choose electors. Before electors can be chosen, there must first be a State convention, before that a city or county convention, and before that a precinct convention or caucus.

It was a long way, he pointed out, from the people to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Mandatory Primaries. Senator Owen proceeded with a gen eral statement of the principles under-
